FLORENCE, - OCTOBER 15, 1887

There is just now an opportunity to advance the interests of Florence that is of too much importance to be neglected by our people. We are all of one opinion in regard to the immeasurable benefits to be derived from the construction of a railroad to this place, and if the proper effort is made at this time we will very shortly hear the whistle of the locomotive. The duty that now devolves upon our people is to form an organization for the purpose of collecting data of the transportation business of the place and its tributary points of distribution, together with an estimate of the probable future growth based upon the absolute law of cause and effect, for presentation to the consideration of railroad men. A proper array of facts and figures will present an argument far more eloquent and convincing than any other plea can be, and if they are urged by men of influence with railroad builders we may hope for an early realization of our wishes. We trust our leading citizens will be prompt in acting upon this suggestion and then place the result of their action into the hands of Mr. Arthur Macy, whose intimate acquaintance with railroad men gives him special advantages in urging the matter upon their attention. A railroad extension from Tempe eastward is under consideration, and it should be built through Florence, as it will be if the proper influence is exerted before the opportunity is lost. The system of roads directed by the Atchison and Topeka & Santa Fe can also be brought through this valley with a little well-directed effort, and both propositions should receive the prompt and earnest attention of our citizens, for now is the golden opportunity.

The Phoenix newspapers are agitating the sorghum industry for the Salt River valley, and steps have been taken to form a company for the manufacture of sugar. The new process of making sugar from sorghum-cane gives highly satisfactory results in Kansas City and it is believed that much better returns will be derived from Arizona cane than contains more than double the amount of saccharine juices than the Kansas and Missouri production and the yield per acre is more than doubled. There is no doubt that such an industry will prove highly profitable to the farmers on the Gila and Salt rivers, and more particularly to those who cultivate the rich bottom lands. A net return of fifty dollars per acre per year is an inducement that the farmer will appreciate, and particularly so with a product of which two sure crops can be raised in one season, if desired by which these figures may be doubled.

Small tracts of land of twenty to forty acres, along the Florence canal, will be sufficient to provide very handsome incomes to their owners when covered with bearing fruit trees or vines. Land that returns a net profit of one hundred to eight hundred dollars per acre per year is the best property one can invest in, and particularly so where the most genial and healthful climate in the world prevails as it does in the Gila valley. It does not wear the life out of the farmer in battling with the hostile elements for a mere existence in this land of sunshine like it does in the east, and he can enjoy all the blessings that money can purchase while his rich fields are pouring their gracious gifts of value into his lap with unceasing constancy. Surely the toiling farmer of the east will not be insensible to these superb advantages when he learns the facts.

The president is meeting with cordial receptions throughout the western states and the several cities wherein he tarries vie with each other in the lavish hospitalities shown the distinguished official. The scenes that meet the presidential eye are like the opening of a rare book of wonders, and he will return to his post of duty more wise for his journeyings and with a better appreciation of the noble country over which he has been called to preside.

The news is brought from the eastern states that a visitation of "the beautiful" has already chilled the marrow of many snow-bound sections, while the people of Florence are still comfortable in their "shirt sleeves" and sleep with open doors. It makes one shiver to read of the snow and sleet that shuts up our eastern friends into their houses like woodchucks in their burrows. In Arizona we live in the fresh air the whole year round.

Our kind old government is afraid the health of the nation might suffer through adulterations in the beer and it purposes having it chemically analyzed for deleterious drugs. We are glad the government chemist is to begin his good work on the necessities of life. After a few decades his successor will reach some of the adulterated luxuries, such as lard, flour, butter, coffee, etc.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good." The unfortunates who are prevented from investing in California real estate by reason of the high prices asked, will come to Arizona and grow rich and healthy, whereas in California they would probably go in with the under-tow of the reaction that will surely come.

If the government would disarm the Apaches there would be fewer objections to their removal to several smaller reservations. A rattlesnake with its fangs undrawn is a rattlesnake under any circumstances.

SOME provision ought certainly to be made to place the streets of Florence in a better condition. They answer all purposes during dry weather, but following a heavy rainfall or overflow of the irrigating ditches they emit odors that are not essential to comfort nor conducive to good health. The ordinary road tax is not sufficient to meet the requirements of this needed reform and all the streets are not county roads that come under the jurisdiction of the overseer of roads. Therefore a concert of action is required by property owners with a view to improve both the sanitary condition and general appearance of the place. Neat and tidily kept streets and premises will impress a stranger with decided favor whereas the present condition is repulsive and disgusting. Let's have a reform in this matter.

FLORENCE is again afflicted with yellow fever, which means the turning of its tide of tourists towards the Pacific Coast.

Central Arizona.
Rev. O. C. Wheeler, of San Francisco, contributes to the Pacific Rural Press the following description of the Gila and Salt river valleys, which he terms "Central Arizona."

The central portion of Arizona has two large valleys, the Gila and the Salt river, named for the rivers (the two principal ones in the territory) that run through their length. From these rivers water is taken in ditches, at such times and places as are deemed desirable, and spread over the land, by ditch and by flow, so as to produce, under the influence of the clear skies and radiant sun that beams upon and overhang, almost perennially, a volume and wealth of vegetable growth seldom found anywhere outside of the torrid zone. This applies equally well to every production within the range of agriculture and pomology.

In addition to the great idea of ditches, from natural streams, the irrigation by "storage" is now coming into use, with the prospect of not only meeting present demands, but an assurance that all possible requirements of the future will be abundantly supplied. With such a topography as has been described, large numbers of deep and sharp gorges and canyons and ravines must necessarily exist. These open into others of the same kind, or into the valleys, often having very narrow openings, which can be filled at a comparatively small cost, and thus confine at pleasure large bodies of water from the sheds above, to be used as the cultivator may desire. And though the streams may, as they often do, "dry up" as is supposed (which is merely a sinking and running under the sand for a distance), these mountain reservoirs have a perennial supply from melting snows, which, in incalculable quantities, pile up every winter on the most elevated points and remain the entire year, giving a supply that absolutely cannot fail.

The question of irrigation in Central Arizona is now settled; that is to say, the feasibility of irrigation, at reasonable cost, all or nearly all of the agricultural lands in the district, is beyond doubt. The large supplies from the rivers, through the several canals and ditches, supplemented by the perennial flow from the numerous storage ponds and lakes in the mountains, leave no room to doubt that every cultivator of the soil will find it easy to obtain all the water he may need. The cultivation of nearly all the irrigable lands, especially those in the two great valleys the Gila and Salt river, is less difficult than in most districts elsewhere. The soil has a sedimentary surface of several feet in depth, very light and porous, generally free from gravel or rocks and stones, such as are usually met with where the land is, in any considerable degree, broken or rolling, and its exceedingly fertile. It is in support of this latter assertion that the Indians occupying the lands now included in the Pima and Gila reservation have cultivated it more than 200 years without once changing their seed, and their crop of last year was in character better than the average crop of the states in the upper Mississippi valley.

So easy of cultivation is most of the land in this valley that it is no uncommon thing for it to be cleared of the little brush that it bears, and with nothing but the ordinary cultivator run once over it, and sowed to some kind of grass or grain, and in three or four months ripen a crop without ever having been touched with a plow. The character of the soil is such and so exactly alike, from the surface to the depth of several feet, that cuttings for raisin grapes are in many cases put into the ground, and make a rapid growth, without any preparation but a single furrow in which to place them. The description here given of the Salt river valley is equally applicable to the Gila and other adjacent valleys of this whole central portion of the territory.

Wretched Indeed.
Are those whom a confirmed tendency to biliousness subject to the serious and changed symptoms indicative of liver complaint, flatulency, sick headache, constipation, furred tongue, and unpleasant breath, a dull or sharp pain in the neighborhood of the affected organ, impurity of the blood and loss of appetite signalize it as one of the most distressing, as it is one of the most common of maladies. There is however a benign specific for the disease and all its manifestations. It is the concurrent testimony of the public and the medical profession, that Hostetter's stomach bitters is a medicine which achieves results speedily felt, thorough and benign. Besides rectifying liver disorder, it invigorates the feeble, cures kidney and bladder complaints, and hastens the convalescence of those recovering from enfeebling disease. Moreover, it is the grand specific for flatulency and ague.

Why Not Take Warning?

(Hoof and Horn.)

During the last week three killings took place in Arizona, which should serve as a lesson to the most thoughtless. In one at Winslow, two cowboys—one the foreman of a large cattle company, the other being his subordinate in the same company's employ—became involved in a groundless quarrel which terminated in the deaths of both. Both were friends, but crazed by drink each essayed to slay the other. Shots were exchanged and one fell to the ground so badly wounded that he at once recognized his race was run and ended his suffering by blowing out his brains with his pistol while his erstwhile friend rode out into the night, to be found next morning dead within a few miles of town. The other killing resulting from the same cause—whisky—occurred at Bisbee, where a drink-maddened man without cause shot down a deputy sheriff, and was shot and instantly killed by the man he had wounded. Both were strangers to each other and never met before the shooting occurred. The third killing, from identically the same cause, occurred at Walnut Grove on Wednesday last, the victim coming to his death at the hands of a former friend whom he had no apparent reason assailed and attempted to kill with a knife. In every case the term of cowboy has been attached to the names of the deceased, and while no one will for an instant claim that the great mass of cowmen are of such a character as to become involved in drunken brawls of this description, yet none will deny that there are a few whose proneness to imbibe renders them liable to the fate which has overtaken the men whose deaths we have chronicled. It is to these last, in all friendliness, we say: Boys, give whisky a wide berth. "Touch not, taste not, handle not" and you will be the gain by it. The friends you may lose by abstaining are not worth retaining for the man whose friendship must be bought with rum is too cheap to tie to. Whatever you may lose by steering clear of the snares of the treacherous stuff in this way will be more than recompensed for by your gain in self-respect and your better standing in the community where fate has cast you. All right-minded men, whether they be themselves drinkers or not, will honor you for your principles in proportion to the steadfastness with which you maintain them. Don't be led astray. Learn how to say "no," and when you say it stay with it till—were about to add "I freeze over," but we won't, as it might shock some of our straight-laced friends. Anyhow, stay with it, and whenever you feel the slightest temptation to linger up just think how many good fellows who have gone down to their graves through rum, and cinch yourself up to the sticking point that you may not yourself fill one of the lonely graves that are found in nearly every locality of the West. Graves filled by the noblest, the bravest, the best—by men whose warm, sympathetic natures led them in good fellowship to drink, while the cold-blooded and clamier subjects loved their dollars too well to give them up in any such way. How those desolate mounds that dot our plains could talk if tongues were but given them. What tales of home, of a mother's work and a mother's face, of the last sad parting to seek a fortune in the West, and then the journey downward to only end when life went out in some drunken brawl or wild delirium. And what might have been. How had it not been for whisky, the soft-cheeked girl, whose image never did grow dim—even when the eye was bleared and the brain most fuddled—might have been something dearer and nearer than all else on earth. Boys, we don't intend to sermonize, simply because we know that we can't tell you anything about the subject that you don't know as well as any man that ever lived. If you have ever tried it, you know the heart-aches and the humiliation it has brought you until you thought as many another has thought before you, that it might be well to end all with your own revolver. Take our advice and let the stuff alone. We ourselves have been somewhat scorched in a go-as-you-please contest with it of some years' duration, and when we tell you that the only way possible to beat the whisky game is to let it severely alone, we know we are talking gospel truth that neither you nor any other man can gainsay.

For full particulars of which event address M. A. Dauphin, New Orleans, La.—New Orleans (La.) Times-Democrat, Oct. 6.

The credit of Arizona is improving in the money markets of the country, and now it is not difficult to obtain capital for any enterprise that is shown to be intelligent and legitimate. The result is that our agricultural and mineral interests are being steadily promoted, and we are just beginning to realize their true wealth and vast extent. More money has been expended in Arizona in the development of mines, in the construction of irrigating ditches and similar works during the past season, than was employed for like purposes for the three preceding years combined.—Phoenix Arizona.

The Tucson Citizen says: For the past several weeks rumors have been current to the effect that the road bed and franchise of the Narrow Gauge has been purchased by the Atchison and Topeka railroad, and will become a part of their immense system. It is further said that the work of construction will be commenced within the next two weeks and pushed ahead towards Globe to meet the Mineral Belt road, now heading towards that place. The gauge is to be changed to the standard broad gauge so common to the country. The reputed consideration is $5,000. From Tucson the road will run south down the Santa Cruz and make connection with the Guaymas branch at Calabasas or Nogales. Should this road be built it means the virtual abandonment of the Arizona and Sonora branch, especially that portion of it lying south of Fairbank and between the two connecting points. The building of this north and south road will be the realization of our long cherished hopes and its influence for good to our old town will be prodigious.

The Pacific Rural Press notes the successful operations of the German Land and Cattle Company, of San Francisco, with assets above liabilities of $2,250,000. They propose to raise calves in Lower California, Sonora and Arizona, and mature them in Utah and Nevada, where they grow larger and bring better prices. Another very important advantage secured by having ranges in different states and territories, is this: That if a dry season happens in one locality, they have other places to which they can take their cattle.
